

CIVIC FORUM

March 30

THE U.S. IN IRAQ OPTIONS, RISKS, PROSPECTS

Regardless of one's political persuasion, there is no issue facing the United States more critical—and, in many respects, more divisive—than deciding a way forward with respect to the war in Iraq. The debate is not about how the United States entered that war. Rather it is about understanding the character of our present situation and forging an effective strategy.

These are issues that affect us all—and these are issues on which there is no consensus.

This non-partisan civic forum brings together a most distinguished and experienced panel with a broad range of views and perspectives. Join us to engage in an important extended discussion on America's greatest foreign policy challenge.

This program—in partnership with WQED Multimedia—is part of a series of programs highlighting the upcoming PBS documentary "America at a Crossroads" and culminating in this forum.
